WHAT HAPPENS IN THE BODY

-WHEN THERAPEUTIC LIGHT IS APPLIED

PhotoBioModulation (PBM) provides the organism with essential support to maintain the body's homeostasis. This is especially true for the red and near- infrared spectrum. Light contributes to maintaining or re-establishing the balance in the organism even on cellular level, where it acts as an antioxidant that helps protect cells against free radicals. It can affect the proteins that protect cells against the degenerative processes. Increases the osmotic resistance of red blood cells and can prevent increased hemolysis.

It affects the growth factors in the nervous system and microvessels as well as muscle and connective tissue. Affects cell signaling, regulates inflammation, immune response and circadian rhythm.

It supports tissue regeneration, stimulates local circulation, and stimulates the lymphatic system.

Therapeutic light affects the mechanisms of disease occurrence and significantly shortens recovery time. It may help to reduce medical costs, since it can be possible to decrease the use of medicines. Therapeutic light cannot replace a healthy lifestyle and medical treatment required for injuries or illnesses, but complementary effects have been proven. As such, it is not a substitute for Medical doctor or veterinary examination. The illuminated area shows better circulation, cellular metabolism and energy production. The cells are improved and the healing and regenerative effects on the tissue are stimulated. In the technical terms, this form of treatment is called PhotoBioModulation (PBM).

Light contributes to maintaining or re-establishing balance in the organism at even cellular level, where it:

- Acts as an antioxidant contributing to the protection of cells from free radicals.
- It affects the proteins that protect cells from the degenerative processes.
- Enhances the osmotic resistance of red blood cells, thus preventing hemolysis.
- Affects the growth factors in the nervous system and microvessels, the muscular and connective tissue.
- Affects cell signaling.
- Regulates inflammations, the immune response, and circadian rhythms.
- Supports tissue regeneration.
- Stimulates local circulation.
- Supports the lymphatic system.

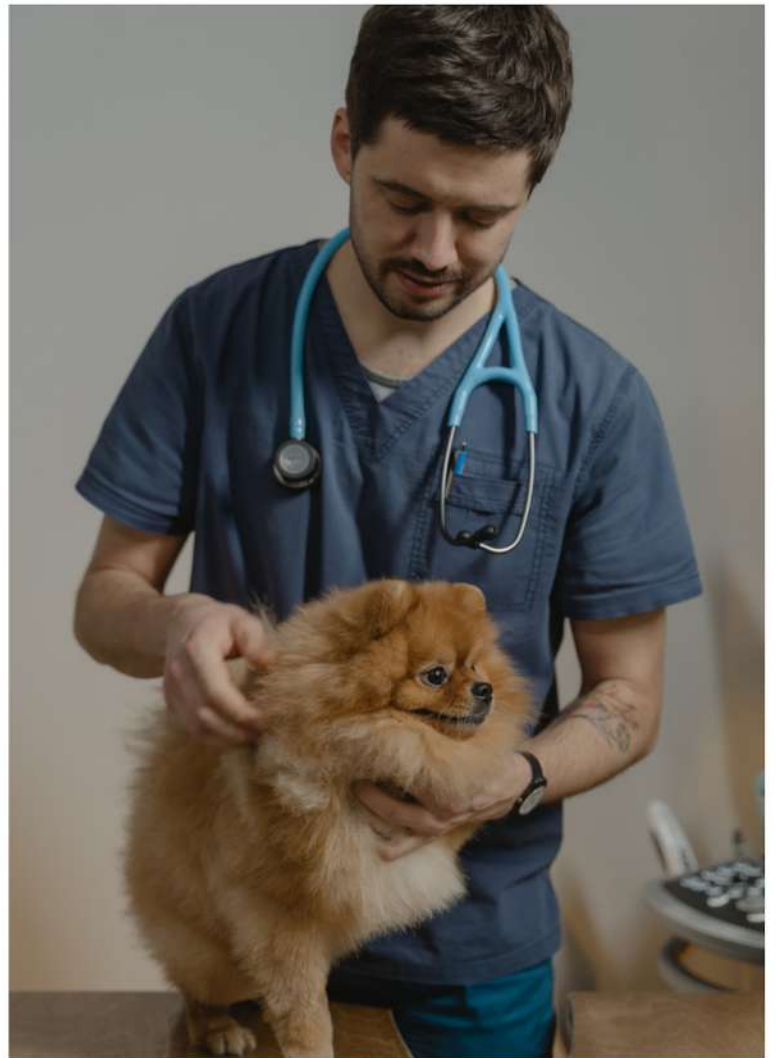

FREQUENCY THERAPY:

Therapeutic light can be modulated with different frequencies. Photonic Lights® are modulated with different frequencies that combine the properties of light with technically compatible frequencies that further stimulate the body's regenerative abilities and enhance the effect of light therapy.

These frequencies also help establish a healthy energy balance through meridian and acupressure points according to acupressure and acupuncture principles.

Photonic Lights have high quality products combined with unique frequencies, and a variety of protocols.
